1. The 1940s and 1950s pattern of immigration to Canada from the United States was characterized by a large influx of immigrants from the United States, particularly from the Midwest and the South, who were seeking employment opportunities in the manufacturing sector. This influx was largely driven by the demand for labor in the post-war boom, particularly in the automotive and aerospace industries. The 1950s saw a significant increase in immigration from the United States, with the number of immigrants rising from approximately 100,000 in 1945 to over 200,000 in 1955. This period is often referred to as the "Great Migration" of Canadians from the United States.
